

ORTHODONTIC FAST FACTS

When should my child see an Orthodontist?

Orthodontics Australia recommend a child's first orthodontic consultation occur at age 7.

Lets talk why

- Early diagnosis lets us correct subtle issues with your child's development
- Starting treatment can prevent the need for those teenage braces
- Knowing your treatment expectations early allows for easier budgeting, relieving the financial burden
- Meeting with children early allows them time to get used to us before we start treatment, and may reduce anxiety
- Preventative treatment reduces the risk of physical and emotional trauma caused by teeth
- Early treatment can improve your child's confidence and clarity of speech

What to expect

Your first appointment will provide an opportunity to get to know one-another. Your Orthodontist will use x-rays or other diagnostic tools to determine where your child is up to in their development.

This information will be used to determine treatment options and timelines. We will work with you to ensure this fits with both your lifestyle and budgetary needs.

Does early consult mean early treatment?

Though a consultation is recommended at age 7, the majority of children do not end up having treatment straight away, rather they are placed in our 6 or 12 month complimentary recall program until their development and timing is right.

Do it now, you deserve it.
